THE ASSOCIATED TRANSCRIPTION LIBRARY

The Associated Program Service and Muzak are inextricably joined and have been from the beginning. Associated was the second radio transcription service (only to World), according to early issues of Broadcasting Magazine. Those who have a scholarly interest in such trivia would enjoy a perusal of those early issues which are on microfiche in major libraries. In the mid-30's, when radio transcription libraries came into being, smaller radio stations could not afford to hire and maintain staff orchestras, as did the larger stations, and there were only four or five major record companies, and those released only a dozen or so records a week...thus, radio stations ran out of music to play. With a transcription library, a radio station could have music in any known (then) category, and lots of it, leased at a minimal fee each month. Of course, like any record issuing company, Associated and the others issued new releases every month, and deleted others, to provide a steady stream of music to the stations. Some of the releases proved more popular than others, which explains why some transcriptions are more elusive today to collectors than others. Further, at the beginning, few stations subscribed (since when did any radio station innovate?) I've seen copies of the pressing plant orders in early Associated files, indicating that in some cases fewer than 50 copies were initially ordered, and then perhaps another 50 or so as new stations signed up. Curious indeed in today's marketplace when a Compact Disc plant normally won't take an order for fewer than 1000.

Most collectors know the expression "in the wax". Actually, early masters, and some pressings (Blue Columbia, for example) were manufactured/cut on a material which resembled wax, and which, in the case of master discs, was destroyed in the plating process (one of the steps leading to release of a record or transcription). Thus none of the early masters of Associated have survived, only test pressings, and those were processed in duplicate by both Western Electric (Owners of the original vertical process used in both World and Associated) and by either RCA or other plants. Then, the better of the two was selected for processing, according to hints which remained in the files at Muzak. So why do I keep mentioning Muzak, the nemesis of music fans of any generation. I'll tell you why! Muzak started in Cleveland as an experiment of the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company, which sent music down its lines to subscribers (just like the carrier current broadcasting system which sent music around countless college dormitories in your youth, or at least, mine) and they quickly discovered that they needed more music to play than the local record shop could provide. Simultaneously, Associated Publishers began recording sessions leading to establishment of their transcription service. It's not clear who bought whom, but Muzak moved to New York the next year (as the mountain went to Mohammed), and within the next ten years became the dominant force of the two. Many of the sessions described in this book produced issues on both Associated (vocal and instrumental) and Muzak (only the instrumentals) over the next two decades until, finally, in the mid-50's, Associated ceased operations, due to the main, to the proliferation of hundreds of record labels, which came along with the radio license explosion after World War Two. I was a lucky fellow, indeed, to start my radio career just at the time the youngest member of the staff (me) was instructed to pack all those 16" transcriptions for return to the company (which owned them under a lease agreement). Needless to say, some of them eventually found their way into my basement. In fact, I was lucky enough to receive (as a sort of gold watch) from my first radio station employer, an RCA turntable and the pick of the Capitol library. Mind you, my salary wasn't much but there were times I got all the records I could carry out of the station. As an early transcription fan and collector, one of the appeals of the job I held as producer and music director for Muzak during the late 70's-early 80's was the chance to learn about, listen to, and collect some of the Associated transcriptions, which any collector will tell you, are among the rarest. They are much in demand for two reasons, 1) they were pressed in small quantities, and 2) they were vertical recordings, which were far superior, technically, to their lateral equivalents. Western Electric subsequently invented the stereo recording process by combining the two in what was known as 45/45 process, in which the groove walls were cut independently at a 45 degree angle to provide the two stereo channels, and in which the cartridge must have vertical and lateral compliance. The RCA and Western Electric transcription reproducers, which they called "universal" had both, but not at the same time, one had to select one or the other, and the correct equalization was simultaneously applied to the signal for best results.

At the risk of making the forward longer than the book itself, I'd better give some clues so you can decipher the listings. Early masters, as we've said, were on wax, and were destroyed in the plating process. They came in A- and AA-, which simply discerned the 12" and 16" variety. The first ones were 12" (A-) and the later ones were 16" (AA-). When the process of mastering on acetate (or, more correctly, laquer) came along, the prefixes were changed to Z- and ZZ- respectively. With the advent of tape came TZ-. At the end of the listings, the 7700's were purchased from World and the 101000 and the VLC were recorded at RCA, and are the rarest of all these discs. Clear? As you might expect, the plot thickens due to the fact that musicians can't always play all the notes correctly, especially at a transcription session, where they were all paid a fraction of a typical recording session, and were expected to record all day long, often exhausting all the material in a band's library, thus the inclusion on transcription of many many tunes which were not otherwise recorded (a bane to the radio stations, but a boon to collectors). Sometime ask Ken Crawford, the dean of transcription collectors about that (if you've got several hours to digest the answer). Anyhow, time to get to the listings, enjoy them, and thanks so much to Charles Garrod for his untiring efforts in preserving this stuff, both as music and as lore. By the way, if you ever get a chance to collect some of this esoterica, be cautious..most of it is dreadful! Oh, and yes, except for the early 12" issues and a few of the 16", the Associated discs were numbered 60,001+ and the Muzak equivalents were X-1+. Happy listening/perusing!

Editor's note: One more thing to add about this book. Due to contractual problems, many of the artists did not use their own name on the transcription when it was released (Larry Clinton used Lennie Carson, for example). Since none of the recording sheets showed anything other than the artist's correct name, we use the name that appeared on the recording session. Future books that will contain listings of the transcriptions by number will go into more detail on that subject.

THE ASSOCIATED TRANSCRIPTION LIBRARY

The Associated Program Service and Muzak are inextricably joined and have been from the beginning. Associated was the second radio transcription service (only to World), according to early issues of Broadcasting Magazine. Those who have a scholarly interest in such trivia would enjoy a perusal of those early issues which are on microfiche in major libraries. In the mid-30's, when radio transcription libraries came into being, smaller radio stations could not afford to hire and maintain staff orchestras, as did the larger stations, and there were only four or five major record companies, and those released only a dozen or so records a week...thus, radio stations ran out of music to play. With a transcription library, a radio station could have music in any known (then) category, and lots of it, leased at a minimal fee each month. Of course, like any record issuing company, Associated and the others issued new releases every month, and deleted others, to provide a steady stream of music to the stations. Some of the releases proved more popular than others, which explains why some transcriptions are more elusive today to collectors than others. Further, at the beginning, few stations subscribed (since when did any radio station innovate?) I've seen copies of the pressing plant orders in early Associated files, indicating that in some cases fewer than 50 copies were initially ordered, and then perhaps another 50 or so as new stations signed up. Curious indeed in today's marketplace when a Compact Disc plant normally won't take an order for fewer than 1000.

Most collectors know the expression "in the wax". Actually, early masters, and some pressings (Blue Columbia, for example) were manufactured/cut on a material which resembled wax, and which, in the case of master discs, was destroyed in the plating process (one of the steps leading to release of a record or transcription). Thus none of the early masters of Associated have survived, only test pressings, and those were processed in duplicate by both Western Electric (Owners of the original vertical process used in both World and Associated) and by either RCA or other plants. Then, the better of the two was selected for processing, according to hints which remained in the files at Muzak. So why do I keep mentioning Muzak, the nemesis of music fans of any generation. I'll tell you why! Muzak started in Cleveland as an experiment of the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company, which sent music down its lines to subscribers (just like the carrier current broadcasting system which sent music around countless college dormitories in your youth, or at least, mine) and they quickly discovered that they needed more music to play than the local record shop could provide. Simultaneously, Associated Publishers began recording sessions leading to establishment of their transcription service. It's not clear who bought whom, but Muzak moved to New York the next year (as the mountain went to Mohammed), and within the next ten years became the dominant force of the two. Many of the sessions described in this book produced issues on both Associated (vocal and instrumental) and Muzak (only the instrumentals) over the next two decades until, finally, in the mid-50's, Associated ceased operations, due to the main, to the proliferation of hundreds of record labels, which came along with the radio license explosion after World War Two. I was a lucky fellow, indeed, to start my radio career just at the time the youngest member of the staff (me) was instructed to pack all those 16" transcriptions for return to the company (which owned them under a lease agreement). Needless to say, some of them eventually found their way into my basement. In fact, I was lucky enough to receive (as a sort of gold watch) from my first radio station employer, an RCA turntable and the pick of the Capitol library. Mind you, my salary wasn't much but there were times I got all the records I could carry out of the station. As an early transcription fan and collector, one of the appeals of the job I held as producer and music director for Muzak during the late 70's-early 80's was the chance to learn about, listen to, and collect some of the Associated transcriptions, which any collector will tell you, are among the rarest. They are much in demand for two reasons, 1) they were pressed in small quantities, and 2) they were vertical recordings, which were far superior, technically, to their lateral equivalents. Western Electric subsequently invented the stereo recording process by combining the two in what was known as 45/45 process, in which the groove walls were cut independently at a 45 degree angle to provide the two stereo channels, and in which the cartridge must have vertical and lateral compliance. The RCA and Western Electric transcription reproducers, which they called "universal" had both, but not at the same time, one had to select one or the other, and the correct equalization was simultaneously applied to the signal for best results.

At the risk of making the forward longer than the book itself, I'd better give some clues so you can decipher the listings. Early masters, as we've said, were on wax, and were destroyed in the plating process. They came in A- and AA-, which simply discerned the 12" and 16" variety. The first ones were 12" (A-) and the later ones were 16" (AA-). When the process of mastering on acetate (or, more correctly, laquer) came along, the prefixes were changed to Z- and ZZ- respectively. With the advent of tape came TZ-. At the end of the listings, the 7700's were purchased from World and the 101000 and the VLC were recorded at RCA, and are the rarest of all these discs. Clear? As you might expect, the plot thickens due to the fact that musicians can't always play all the notes correctly, especially at a transcription session, where they were all paid a fraction of a typical recording session, and were expected to record all day long, often exhausting all the material in a band's library, thus the inclusion on transcription of many many tunes which were not otherwise recorded (a bane to the radio stations, but a boon to collectors). Sometime ask Ken Crawford, the dean of transcription collectors about that (if you've got several hours to digest the answer). Anyhow, time to get to the listings, enjoy them, and thanks so much to Charles Garrod for his untiring efforts in preserving this stuff, both as music and as lore. By the way, if you ever get a chance to collect some of this esoterica, be cautious..most of it is dreadful! Oh, and yes, except for the early 12" issues and a few of the 16", the Associated discs were numbered 60,001+ and the Muzak equivalents were X-1+. Happy listening/perusing!

Since the recording sheets listed the artist's correct name, and since most of the information in this book was derived from the recording sheets, we have elected not to use the phony names. We will list them here and thanks to Ken Crawford, Rod Baum, Don Peak and Lennie Kunstadt for the information that appeared in Record Research Magazine in 1988. Associated followed the lead of World Transcriptions in using phony names, as they were evidently fearful of reprisal by record companies or sponsors. In most cases, they retained the initials of the artist.
